

MAKERS OF FINE PIPES SINCE 1906

In the long and varied history of pipe smoking, pipes have been made of many different materials. The town of Gouw, in Holland, became famous as a place where clay pipes were made, the clay being taken from the bed of the Meuse River.

In India, pipes are made of bone. A native American pipe is the corncob. Other materials include stone, soapstone, cherry wood, bamboo, agate, precious stones, animals' bones, birds' legs, silver, copper, tin and iron.

Pipe-making materials that have survived to the present day include meerschaum, calash, and — best and foremost! — briar. Of all pipe materials, briar easily transcends all others.

Briar Burl

On the wind-swept hills surrounding the Mediterranean there grows a very hardy shrub called the White Heath (Erica Arborea), from whence comes the well-known briar. Growing in the form of a burl just above the roots at ground level, the briar is exceedingly dense, hard and fine-grained. However, due to flaws and softer areas in the burls only 7-10% of the bowls made from them are first-quality. It is exclusively from this small percentage that all Brigham pipes are made.

For hundreds of years the smoker has enjoyed his pipe; but he was forced to accept, along with its pleasures, the bite on the tongue and ill effects to the health. It was found that the so-called "evils" were caused by volatile oils formed in the combustion of the tobacco.

Exhaustive research toward the removal of these has resulted in the present Brigham patented pipe. Based on sound scientific principle, the replaceable wooden insert, condensing out biting volatile oils, leaves the smoke fresh, cool and dry. This feature has been incorporated in such a way as to add the greatest amount of strength to the pipe, and it is seldom indeed that one is broken.

Taking 134 skilled operations in manufacture, no effort has been spared in making available to you the finest pipe that has ever been produced.

Brigham "POPULAR" $5.95

This is the standard Brigham containing the patented feature. Made of first-grade briar, the "Popular" quality is finished by the same renowned multiple process characteristic of the better Brigham pipes.

Brigham Select $7.95

The BRIGHAM patent "Select" pipes are made from the cream of the first-quality Algerian bowls. The briar is carefully chosen for its hardness and dense grain. Although this means a slightly longer breaking-in period, it also means better smoking and a longer-lasting pipe.

Brigham "EXCLUSIVE" $10.00

Perfect in balance, light of weight, these full-grained, close-textured briars receive the same careful processing as the Brigham "Prestige Pipes." Their mellow smoking quality soon proves their worth.

Brigham 'Prestige Pipes' $12.50

Special Grains $15.00

For the connoisseur. Handsomely patterned by Nature, these pipes are distinguished by their extremely attractive grains. A very popular quality for presentations.

Straight Grains $25.00

Only once in a thousand times does Nature produce the perfection found in these, the ultimate in fine pipes. Rare and beautiful, there has been lavished on them the utmost in fine craftsmanship.
